By Sebastien Galina & Rachel Ye

Product detail pages will feature the title of the product as h1, high in the hierarchy as well as in the HTML title tag for the browser tab.

All pages will use the navigation bar/header elements from the style guide, while the product listing will feature the grid of products, which will be filterable using JavaScript helpers to add/remove items to the grid as needed. Buttons will be used for primary, secondary and default states. For example, on the product page, the primary button will be used for “Order”, while secondary buttons may be used for “Give Feedback”. Default buttons, which would be more subdued in the hierarchy, will be used for the navigation bar since it is common to all pages.

We will style the account/cart page with table elements to demark the order breakdown, along with responsive forms for add/remove.
